

New disaster assessment calls for additional $2 billion for Hurricane Harvey recovery

Updated calculations could have implications for disaster-impacted housing nationwide

Back in 2018, Hurricane Harvey swept through Houston, Texas and the surround areas, bringing disaster upon the residents. Now, new assessments show the city may need an additional $2 billion in funding. By LaRence Snowden

Read More

LaRence Snowden

LaRence Snowden is the board Chairman of the Houston Housing Authority. He has served on the board of commissioners at HHA since 2012. Snowden is also the assistant vice president of research for Texas Southern University.

